MEASURING YOUR LIFE

At times in our lives we stop to look back and weigh what we have done. Sometimes we are satisfied, sometimes we are disappointed, and sometimes we are concerned. No matter what we discover it is good to take measure of our lives. It ensures us that we are using our one short life in a way that is worthy of this wonderful gift from God.

There are so many ways to measure our lives. We talk about our successes, but everyone has different definitions of success. We talk about the importance of family and relationships, but how do we measure these. What measuring stick do we use to assess our lives. Do we use career, money, status, stuff, education, popularity, integrity, happiness, adventures, health?

At different points in our lives we use some of these to measure our lives, but over time we move on to things that are harder to measure. How many people love you, do you love what you are doing, do you feel you are doing what you were born to do, how many lives have you improved, will you be remembered after you die, are you at peace with God?

There is no perfect way to measure our lives. But these questions and maybe some others you can think of are worth considering.
